Zero Preparation Activities

Teaching English involves covering a wide range of grammatical forms and being ready to explain the massive volume of vocabulary that makes up our wonderful language. But despite our best efforts, sometimes our students find all of this teaching comes across as a little dry. That's where games can come in especially handy. This presentation will provide some simple, communicative games that you can do in your lessons. Each one is adaptable for almost every age and level - and even better, they require no preparation or materials on the part of the teacher.

Biography

Christopher Walker is an EFL teacher and teacher trainer based in the south of Poland. He has been working in EFL for over a decade, and recently completed a master's in Applied Linguistics and TESOL with the University of Leicester. He has only been lucky enough to visit Scotland once so far, but that visit was enough to instil within him an undying love for the country and the people (and students!) he met there. He can be reached online at closelyobserved.com.
